That was the important blow spoken of in the Annual Register. The Maryland forces were preparing to defend the city and soldiers were being drilled throughout the state with the expectation Of going to the aid Of Baltimore 3 de fenders when they were needed. Across the Chesapeake on the Eastern Shore, bod ies of volunteers were camped ready to move at a moment s notice. In Kent the Twenty-first Regiment of Maryland Militia under Col. Philip A. Reed was encamped at Bellair, now known as F airlee, a little village about five miles from the Bay shore and about seven miles west Of Chestertown. The regiment consisted Of five com panics of infantry, one cavalry and one artillery company, in all just 174 men. They had five pieces of artillery and were fairly well equipped with guns, pistols and swords, but had only twenty rounds Of ammunition for each man. It is needless to say that coi. Reed was kept posted by the citizens Of the County and he quickly received news from the bay-shore farms whenever a strange sail was seen out on the waters of the Chesapeake. Late Saturday afternoon, August the twenty-seventh, news reached Col. Reed that a frigate was headed up the bay about abreast Of Swan Point and with her were two smaller vessels. A strong southerly breeze filled their...
