There are plenty of excellent leaders, so that we never have reason to stand still for them. Good men, and good sayings, and good books, and noble plans, and high resolves, and holy resolutions, are all excellent leaders that commend themselves to our judgment and imitation. Look at a child pursuing a butterfly. A dozen times he falls, and a dozen times he rises again to renew the chase. See the man, the hunter in hot pursuit after the timorous hare. Up hill and down, through wood and water, brake and brier, his whole soul is in his object; and shall the capture of a butterfly, and the hunting of a timorous j hare, call up in youth and manhood, more...
