Unbeknownst to major intelligence agencies, there has been a clandestine agency operating for twenty years as a standalone UN agency. The purpose of the Global Intelligence Service (GIS) is to monitor and right the wrongs of poor decision making by the UN Security Council and others involved in the arms and weapons industry. It has links to all corners of the globe through the UN World Tourism Organisation. A new Secretary-General, Jackson Sinclair, learns about the work of the GIS under his command and develops a plan that will shake the arms and weapons industry for years to come and halt the work of the secretive International Defence and Arms Consortium (IDAC). The GIS's secret agent, Samantha Matthews and her special gift was critical to the success of the GIS's mission. Only four people in the world knew of her unique talent and how it helped her in the most dangerous situations. Could ESP help to foresee mortal danger? An asset placed at the highest levels of the...
